A woman was threatened by a man carrying a concealed firearm on the subway Friday, police said.

The 33-year-old victim was riding a Manhattan-bound E train at around 8:40 p.m. when a man sat next to her in the vicinity of Broadway and Roosevelt Avenue, authorities said.

After the man threatened to slap her, the woman moved to a different section of the train. He approached her a second time and lifted his shirt to expose the handle of a firearm, police said.

The victim exited the train, while the man remained on the train. Police said there were no injuries.
